SUMMARY

Christopher Wink is a national leader in new media and niche journalism. Passionate about informing communities, the bicycle commuter has focused his career on using the web to strengthen real world relationships for good. He speaks regularly about civic impact, entrepreneurship and innovation.

EXPERIENCE

Cofounder and Publisher, Technical.ly

December 2010-Present

I developed the editorial strategy and maintain its mission in connecting and convening local technology and entrepreneurship communities to catalyze civic impact, while broadening the company's reach to wider markets.

Accomplishments

- Led $700,000 projected 2014 budget, fundraising and vision
- Built from one blog to a five-market network of local technology news sites with 12-person staff
- Launched prominent initiatives in multiple cities, including Philly Tech Week and Baltimore Innovation Week

Media Director, Back on My Feet

January 2010-December 2010

I joined the startup nonprofit and transformed its limited and traditional media strategy to one with a rich connectivity between its messaging, mission and audience cultivation.

Accomplishments

- Led content strategy, marketing and community engagement for a then $3.4 million, 30-person, five-city mission-minded nonprofit.
- Launched a blog with editorial mission that grew to attract more than 10,000 monthly page views in six months.

EDUCATION

Temple University

Bachelor of Arts in Political Science — 2004-2008

Active in neighborhood reporting while editing the college newspaper, I completed multiple international study abroad programs and an honors thesis on Philadelphia politics. I graduated magna cum laude and served as the undergraduate university-wide commencement speaker.
